

BEAUTY

Jodi Top, MA, LCSW

“We do not want merely to see beauty, though, God knows, even that is bounty enough. We want to pass into it, to receive it into ourselves” – C. S. Lewis from The Weight of Glory.

I find this quote so true it is hard to express at times. True beauty, not the high gloss, high fashion, air brushed kind, but true beauty has a way about it. It stills, it restores, I think it even redeems. Think of this, your beautiful spouse tucking her hair absent-mindedly behind her ear, or a father’s gentle way with his sleeping child, and the silent swirls of a peaceful blooming rose.

True beauty has a way of almost making me hold my breath, or lose it. And I seek it for its nourishment, hungrily.
